

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

The study, entitled An Analysis of David Copperfield's Moral Values In Charles Dickens' David Copperfield has two purposes, namely to (1) explain the David Copperfield's moral values in David Copperfield, (2) elaborate the influences of environment upon David Copperfield's moral values. The writer applies library research including internet browsing to get the relevant data. The conceptual models are used to find the data in the novel. The data corpus of this thesis includes all of words, phrases, clauses, sentences, and discourses related to David Copperfield's moral values. Psychology approach is used to analyze the data descriptively because psychological approach is important to be used in order to know the main character's side.

Here, the writer has analyzed some moral values in the character of David, they are innocent, optimistic, naïve, loving, and honest. David is an innocent person. He does not make any trouble in his childhood but his stepfather always gives him some bad treatments. Although, he lives without his parents' love, David is still an optimistic person. He undergoes a lot of difficulties in his life; but David always thinks positively and he never gives up. David is also a naïve person. David always sees the world as a think of beauty, he never thinks bad to the other people although the other people say bad things to him. However, David is a loving and honest person. As a loving person, he has the emotional reaction that shows his love. David has emotional reaction and he tries to show that to Dora, because he thinks Dora is the right one for him. As an honest person, David has human quality of communicating and acting truthfully.

Environment influences David Copperfield's moral values. Firstly, families take effects on David Copperfield's moral values. David has no father's figure that David really needs. But he has a lot of people who care of him, such as Peggotty, Steerforth and Aunt Betsy. They motivate him and make him a good person and an honorable man. Secondly, schools form David Copperfield's moral values. David starts to know his environment, different kinds of people, also different characters in Salem house. David gets good friends there who always support and cheer him and their friendship will be last forever. Thirdly, jobs have impact on David Copperfield's moral values. David feels shocked and sad after the death of Dora. David goes to continue where he writes some novels there. He writes some novels to forget his sadness of life and also to realize his creativity, idea, imagination and experience. However, he gets his own successful after suffering and facing a lot of problems.

Finally, after writing this thesis, the writer learns more about the moral values. Moral is the quality that grows among the people to work together with the other people. Each person has their own moral values in his or her lives. Moral values can be appearing from every problem. Person gains the capacity within himself or herself to distinguish his or her right behavior from his wrong behavior. Moreover, he or she can make correct choices based on his or her own knowledge.
