

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

This research entitled "An Analysis of Frequency Adverb in English". This thesis is focused on two problems that have to be solved. The reason of choosing this topic is that the researcher wants to know the frequency adverbs more deeply and studies frequency adverbs, people know where to place frequency adverbs in the right position. Those problems describe the structure of frequency adverbs in English and describe the use of frequency adverbs in English. The data which is analyzed are taken from Time Magazine edition of January up to June 2006.

In this research, in analyzing the data in order to solve the problems, the writer of this thesis uses research method that is descriptive method. This method is done by collecting, classifying, and analyzing the data. In analyzing data this research applied two techniques. They are expansion technique and repetition technique. After doing those activities, the writer applies the library research by taking and collecting the most appropriate data. The total numbers of data in this research are 30 sentence.

Being analyzed the data and the problems, the writer finds the structure of frequency adverb in English. The first is the structure of frequency adverb sometimes which consists of sometimes + S + P, S + sometimes + P, and S + P + sometimes. The second is the structure of frequency adverb always which consists of S + always + P. The third is the structure of frequency adverb usually that consists of S + usually + P. The fourth is structure of frequency adverb rarely which consists of S + rarely + P. The fifth is structure of frequency adverb often that consists of S + often + P. The sixth is structure of frequency adverb never that consists of S + never + P. The seventh is structure of frequency adverb seldom that consists of S + seldom + P.

Besides, the writer finds the use of frequency adverb in English. Those adverb frequency consists of sometimes, showing the something happens irregularly, always showing the activity that happens in a certain time, usually showing the activity that is done so often but not full in intensity, rarely showing the activity that happens not very frequently or so low in frequency, often showing something happens nearly much in frequency but it is not full, never is the activity that never happens, and seldom is something that happens so limited.

Finally, frequency adverbs in English can be used properly when the user of it have a good knowledge on their structure and how they applying are in sentences.
