

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

The importance of understanding the poems of Robert Frost is to make the people realize and understand that Frost is a naturalized poet. The poem "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" and that of "In Winter in the Woods Alone" tell about the nature of being human, the natural and real things to pour out his wishes and his purposes. In this case, the writer of the thesis uses data collection from some references on the library and structural approach to analyze her thesis. Besides data collection, she also uses data corpus which is taken from the theme of two poems "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" and that of "In Winter in the Woods Alone." The data analysis which is used by the writer of the thesis is a deductive method.

After analyzing the problem in the previous chapter, the denotative meaning of both of the poems is the traveling on the woods in winter, it can give the awareness to the traveler that the nature is beautiful and it must be kept by the people. Besides the awareness to the nature, the adventure on the wood in night winter can also give the awareness to God that God is greatest. The production of the God can be easy to be destroyed by the people's hands without the wishing of God.

The connotative meaning is also found in both poems. The connotative meaning meant is the problem of life that must be faced by the all people. People must look for the solving of problem so that he does not have the burden of life.

People must have a solution for difficult problem. People will be happier if they do not have a problem. If people die so they will die calmly and they does not leave the burden life.

The writer of the thesis also finds the similarity of the two poems "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" and that of "In Winter in the Woods Alone." There are three similarities, first, the responsibility of people to take care of the nature so the beauty of nature can be enjoyed by every one and every time. Second, the awareness to the God is the greatest. It is proved that the disaster will not happen without the of God will. The third, most people have the difficulty of life, for example: to look for the happiness in life. That is not easy to get it because someone must be clever to choose the best way how we can get the happiness in life. It must be found before he dies.
